RESOURCE OF THE MONTH

Faculty Career Planning Resources

Faculty should be in an on-going effort to ensure they are documenting their academic contributions and preparing for academic promotion. The Office of Faculty Affairs and Development has made some recent updates to the Faculty Handbook, Guidelines for Appointment, Re-Appointment, and Promotion, and Academic Personnel Policy.

RESOURCE CORNER

Writing Good Narrative Feedback

All feedback is extremely important to our students' development and growth, and summative (final) narrative feedback may be used on the Medical Student Performance Evaluation (or MSPE, formerly known as the Dean's Letter). Here are a few tips and tricks for writing great narrative feedback:

- - Feedback should be specific, focused on observed behaviors or skills
 - Feedback should be constructive, focused on potential actions
 - Feedback should be timely, focused on the recent past
 - Feedback should be in complete sentences with proper grammar and punctuation

Please reach out to your course or clerkship director, chair, or the assessment team (mdassessment@tcu.edu) if you have any questions about student assessment, evaluation, or feedback.

Fireside Chat: Contextualizing Care

Click below to view this 20-minute fireside chat on the interpersonal qualities of clinicians who contextualize care, presented by Saul J. Weiner, MD.

During this video, Dr. Weiner will explore ways to avoid patient harm and physician burnout by practicing with compassion and mindfulness of what a patient may be feeling and experiencing.
